	accounting principle
The double entry for the posting of the purchases journal entries is completed by posting the individual amounts to the purchases ledger.
The purchase of goods on 5 April did not include goods costing $55 which Bilal bought for his own use.
The stationery purchased on 6 April had been recycled. This is expected to improve the reputation of the business. Reputation is not recorded in the accounting statements.
The value of office equipment shown in the financial statements was based on its purchase price.

4 Nadia is a trader. Her financial year ends on 31 March. She extracted a trial balance at 31 March 2020. The debit and credit totals did not agree. The difference was entered into a suspense account.

After Nadia prepared draft financial statements, she discovered the following errors.

1 The purchases account was overcast by $110.

2 $13 for discount allowed in February 2020 had been credited to the discount allowed account as $15.

3 A payment for insurance, $220, was correctly recorded in the cash book, but was recorded as $202 in the insurance account.

4 Commission received, $65, had been debited to the account for commission payable. The entry to the cash book had been correctly made.

5 Cash drawings, $85, were correctly entered in the cash book but were credited to the drawings account.

6 The cost of a vehicle repair, $190, had been debited to the motor vehicles account.

7 A payment of $100 to Robert had been posted to the account of Roberta.

REQUIRED

(a) Prepare the suspense account. Include the original difference on the trial balance as a balancing figure.
